

○ REILINGEN, Baden, GERMANY - April, 1945

This is the town we took Easter Sunday. (We moved in late Sunday afternoon without any trouble, and stayed here a couple of days.) This is a view down what I guess you'd call the main drag of the town. (There is quite a beautiful church here, which you can see the steeple of down the street.)

Reilingen, - Apr., 1945

A closer view of the church at Reilingen. It's not an extremely large church, but I think it's a very beautiful one - especially for a small town.

12 Reilingen - Apr. 1945

A street scene in Reilingen.
(That's the church at the left again.)
Note the Nazi swastika and eagle on the wall of the building behind the church. You see those things painted all over the place.

(The country around here was still flat since we were still in the Rhine valley.)

Reilingen - Apr., 1943

An angle shot of the church which didn't turn out so hot.

(I still think it's a pretty church though.)

71 Reilingen - Apr., 1945

L.to.r. - DeFusco, Richard, Terrien, and Miller.

This was taken on a little bridge crossing a stream that ran along through the backyards of the houses we were staying in. (Remember the letter where I was telling about all the pretty little yellow flowers blooming and the stream, etc.? This is at that place, only you can't see no flowers in the picture.)

Reilingen - Apr., 1945

Me and Benny
on The same bridge, (It was real warm when these were taken.)

Reilingen - Apr., 1945

Benny Miller,

(This was taken just on the other side of the bridge.)

= Reilingen - Apr., 1945

Me (in same place - obviously).

Standing, l. to r. - McFadden, Seidel, Richard.

(I don't what that piece of machinery they're on is. I think it's some kind of dam gate or something.)

19 Reilingen - Apr., 1945

This looked awful pretty when I took the picture, but it doesn't look like much here. There are lots of pretty colored flowers, etc., but you can't see them here.
