FROM THE PUBLISHERS:

This record depicts, historically, the personnel and some of the training activities of the men of the 100th Division, U. S. A.

The many and great demands made upon the free time of the personnel, together with attendance at Service Schools away from the post, has made it impossible to show photographs of all of the men. Accordingly, it was necessary to picture those actually available at the time data for this Review were compiled.

"Our ultimate objective can be simply stated: it is to build for ourselves, for all men, a world in which each individual human being shall have the opportunity to live out his life in peace; to work productively, earning at least enough for his actual needs and those of his family; to associate with friends of his choice; to think and worship freely; and to die secure in the knowledge that his children, and their children, shall have the same opportunities."

WAR DEPARTMENT
 THE CHIEF OF STAFF
 WASHINGTON, D. C.

February 17, 1944

TO THE OFFICERS AND MEN OF THE 100TH DIVISION:

Inspections indicate that the preparation of your Division has been thorough and that you will soon be ready for combat, which means your transfer to an active theater.

In the Mediterranean and in the Pacific we have learnt in a very costly school that the training of the sections and platoons and the initiative and continued aggressive spirit of their leaders have been the determining factors in every engagement. Responsibility for successful advances and determined defense in bitter fighting has been divided about equally between the division commander and the young leaders I have just referred to. The responsibility for enduring casualties, prolonged hardships and extreme fatigue without loss of morale and weak pessimism is more widely divided among the various leaders and is one of our greatest hazards in campaign.

Therefore I look to your Division to set new standards in all these matters and to give us powerful assistance in bringing this war to an early end.

HEADQUARTERS 100TH INFANTRY DIVISION
Office of the Commanding General
Fort Bragg, North Carolina

To the Officers and Men of the 100th Infantry Division:

Through hard and intelligent work by all ranks, during the past year and a half, we have built a well-trained, well-knitted combat unit, ready and anxious for action. In our growth certain definite characteristics have been developed as a result of accomplishment in military training. To my mind, the most outstanding and valuable characteristic of the Division is its spirit and pride, for it is the measure or sum of the qualities which go to make up the combat soldier of an infantry division.

The spirit and pride of our Division is embodied in our relations with our associates and in the events which marked our progress during the period of training. It is most fitting, therefore, that at this time a pictorial record of these be made to recall for each of us in years to come his association with the 100th Infantry Division.

I should like to take this opportunity to express again my sincere appreciation for the unselfish and faithful cooperation I have received from all ranks, and say that I have every confidence in the ability of this Division to accomplish, with honor and distinction, the vital tasks which lie ahead.

WITHERS A. BURRESS
MAJOR GENERAL
U. S. A.

COMMANDING GENERAL, 100th INFANTRY DIVISION

Major General Withers Alexander Burress was born in Richmond, Virginia, on November 24, 1894.

He was graduated from the Virginia Military Institute in 1914, and on November 30, 1916, was commissioned as a Second Lieutenant of Infantry in the Regular Army.

In World War I, he served in the Troyan Sector, at Chateau-Thierry, in the Aisne-Marne Offensive, in the Pont-a-Mousson Sector and in the St. Mihiel Offensive, and after the Armistice remained in Paris with the G-2 Section, A.E.F., until November, 1919.

He has since been graduated from the Infantry School and the Advanced Course at Fort Benning, Ga., the Command and General Staff School, Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and the Army War College, Washington, D. C. He has served as an instructor at the Infantry School, Virginia Military Institute, and the Command and General Staff School, remaining at the latter for three years.

On July 1, 1940, he joined the Operations and Training Division of the War Department General Staff, and in 1941 became Assistant Commandant of the Infantry School.

On August 9, 1942, he was promoted to the temporary rank of Major General, and a few days later was assigned to command the 100th Infantry Division.

MAURICE L. MILLER

BRIGADIER GENERAL

U. S. A.

ASSISTANT COMMANDING GENERAL, 100th INFANTRY DIVISION

Brigadier General Maurice L. Miller was born in Oronoco, Minnesota, on September 19, 1894, and following graduation from the United States Military Academy was commissioned a Second Lieutenant of Infantry on June 13, 1916.

In World War I, he sailed for France in August, 1918, and shortly afterward became a battalion commander in the 34th Infantry. He was wounded in action on October 15, 1918, near Thiaucourt. He returned to the United States in June, 1919, and later became an instructor at the U.S.M.A.

He has since been graduated from the Advanced Course at the Infantry School and the Command and General Staff School. In August, 1938, he became a member of the Infantry Board.

Assigned to the 100th Infantry Division as Assistant Division Commander, he received a promotion to the temporary rank of Brigadier General on November 13, 1942.

JOHN B. MURPHY

BRIGADIER GENERAL

U. S. A.

COMMANDING GENERAL, 100th DIVISION ARTILLERY

Brigadier General John B. Murphy was born in Macedonia, Iowa, on June 16, 1898, and attended Texas A. & M. and the United States Military Academy and was commissioned a Second Lieutenant of Field Artillery on November 1, 1918.

Shortly thereafter he was assigned to make a tour of observation and study of European battlefields of World War I. Returning to the United States, he taught Military Science and Tactics at Utah University and was later assigned to Hawaii. He later returned to instruct ROTC classes at Ohio State University.

In 1938, he attended the Command and General Staff School and later moved to Fort Bragg, N. C., where he became Post executive officer in January, 1941. He was promoted to the temporary rank of Brigadier General on April 27, 1943, and was assigned to the Seventh Armored Division as a combat commander.

In October, 1943, he was assigned to the 100th Infantry Division as artillery commander, replacing Brig. Gen. Theodore E. Buechler.

A HISTORY OF THE 100th INFANTRY DIVISION

Every man of the 100th Division has special events he keeps in his mental diary of life in the Division, and probably no two men keep the same record, for no two men have quite the same impressions, even of the same occurrences.

Just about everyone came by train to Fort Jackson, S. C., where the 100th was formed, but every last one of us have individual recollections about the trip: to some, it was a cindery, jolting car voyage, in ancient wooden cars with pot-bellied stoves and stove-pipes; and to others, a mysterious journey into the great beyond, where destination is unknown until the officer announced on the siding that you were bound for the 100th Division, Fort Jackson. And the same goes for different interpretations of the dozens of things that happened in the 100th in rapid-fire succession: the greeting at the train that early morning; meeting the noncoms; the first kitchen police and guard; first GI movie, and trip to Columbia; the first drills and lectures; dry firing and then the real thing at the range during raw, frosty March. The first Maggie's drawers, and first bull's eye . . . and how good it was to have that warm shower after this first week beyond the comforts of civilization.

All these events are remembered well, and no written history is necessary to recall them except maybe a few reminders. So here they are, a few high spot doings that happened from the date of the 100th Division's birth up to its present training:

ACTIVATION took place at Fort Jackson, S. C., in ceremonies which had as its troops the noncommissioned officer cadre taken from the 76th Division, then at Fort George G. Meade, Md. Commander of the 76th Division, Maj. Gen. Emil F. Reinhardt, presented the Century's colors to Maj. Gen. Withers A. Burrell, the 100th commander, symbolizing the ties of the two divisions. Maj. Gen. William H. Simpson, then commander of XII Corps, of which the 100th was a unit, sounded the keynote for the division's training, calling for preparation which should lead to "success in battle."

ARRIVAL OF TRCOPS followed shortly after the activation, and men fresh from every kind of civilian pursuit flowed into the area of hutments which was the 100th Division's home. The soldiers about to begin their training had come from all over the eastern half of the United States, with most hailing from the Atlantic seaboard states. The bulk of these were inducted from reception centers at Fort Devens, Mass., Camp Upton, N. Y., Fort Dix, N. J., Fort Jackson, S. C., and Fort McPherson, Ga.

With the start of training, the 100th Division began to make whatever history there was to be of the Division, for no division of that designation had previously existed. A 100th Division was almost formed in World War I, but activation plans were cancelled with the signing of the Armistice, and the Division's commanding officer, Brig. Gen. W. B. Cochran, was ordered from Camp Bowie, Texas, to another assignment.

BASIC TRAINING was the beginning of the process which transformed civilians into soldiers—and men puffing over the obstacle course knew there was no easy way. Other Americans and Allied service men over the world were using in battle the lessons learned in just such basic and advanced training; they had travelled the same road, and men of the 100th were impressed with the necessity of gaining all possible during each training day. Centurymen, in fleeting reports gotten in barracks radios and glances at newspaper headlines, saw the war commencing a gigantic turn in the Allies' favor: The Russians were beginning their immense winter push, demolishing and surrounding the German forces at Stalingrad; the British were driving the Nazis across the length of Africa's Mediterranean coastline, while Americans closed in from the west on Tunisia; our forces in the South Pacific were taking Guadalcanal in their first important ground victory, and advancing in New Guinea, while our planes were hitting the Japs hard.

But tremendous work still lay ahead, and Centurymen plunged on through the training which would make them capable of joining in accomplishing it. Standing out near the end of basic training was the first Division review, the first time that the new men had seen their whole Division assembled at once in a single place. Honored at the ceremony was Governor Olin D. Johnston, of South Carolina, who congratulated the 100th on what it had accomplished in a short training period.

Official recognition of the strides made during this initial training in soldiering came after completion of tests administered the XII Corps. The most extensive tests ever given a unit at Fort Jackson, they embraced all basic subjects, including military courtesy, map and aerial photograph reading, close and extended order drill, and technical subjects, such as marches, bivouacs, firing of weapons, tactics, and other combat operations. A XII Corps summary of the results of the tests described the Division's results as "very satisfactory."

SUCCEEDED TRAINING PHASES of the Division brought new soldiers together into fighting teams and life in the field. At first, week-long encampments were made on Fort Jackson's reservation, with the expedients of field life learned by doing them: tenting so the mosquitoes, water, and wind were avoided; keeping equipment together and in working order; eating out of messkits and keeping canteens full. At the same time there was the regular training which threw together men into fighting units. Later phases welded different branches into powerful fighting arms, with field artillery, infantry, and engineers engaged in combat problems.

COMBAT TEAM EXERCISES were held throughout the summer over the northern half of South Carolina, with one team pitted against another in simulated battle conditions. Here, lessons in field life and individual and unit tactics were put to use, while road marches added stamina to Centurymen's condition.

LARGER EXERCISES followed in the late fall and winter, and men of the Division who worked, slept, and fought simulated battles together, began to know that they were ready to face the gruelling hardships of combat.

STAY AT FORT BRAGG, N. C., came as hotel life to the Division after this extended period afield. As the Division streamed into the post late in January, every soldier will remember with joy the welcome sight of barracks, shower rooms, and just plain warm rooms and beds. Training, however, did not slow down by any means, but, if anything, increased in severity. The big job lay ahead and there could not be too much preparation.

The Infantry Division

SPEARHEAD OF THE ATTACK

AN Infantry Division is the basic arm of an army. Around it and for its support all other branches of the Army are built. Without the Infantry, there just wouldn't be an army.

Of course, as most of us know, an Infantry Division is not composed entirely of foot troops. There's almost every component of the Army Ground Forces within an Infantry Division—Artillery, Engineers, Signal Corps, Medics, Reconnaissance Troop, Quartermaster Company and other special troops. Briefly, an Infantry Division is an entity in itself, capable of subsisting and fighting on its own.

The battle mission of an Infantry Division is to take and hold territory. Before the Infantry there is nothing but the enemy. In every battle, the doughboy and his outfit are in the thick of things, 'way up front where the payoff is either life or death.

We are the first to occupy territory, and we occupy it by our own sweat and suffering and blood. And we hold it, fighting like hell for every inch of earth. Once we get a foothold, we push on and on, retreating only when there is no other way out.

Technically, a United States Infantry Division is a triangular division. This means that in each division there are three combat teams, with each combat team composed of an Infantry Regiment and a Battalion of Artillery. Supporting and servicing each combat team is a company of Engineers and a company of Medics. And supporting the Division as a whole are the various special troops.

Broken down, an Infantry Regiment is made up of three combat battalions and one provisional battalion that functions as a service unit for the battalion. In each Infantry Battalion there are three rifle companies, one heavy weapons company and a headquarters company.

In the Infantry Division Artillery there are four battalions—three light Field Artillery Battalions and one medium. A Field Artillery Battalion is composed of five batteries, three firing batteries, a headquarters battery and a service battery.

Attached to an Infantry Division are a Battalion of Engineers, a Signal Company, a Quartermaster Company, an Ordnance Company, a Reconnaissance Troop, a Medical Battalion and a Headquarters Company.

While an Infantry Division primarily moves by foot, the mechanized strength of the unit is immense. All field pieces and heavy weapons are motor-drawn. The Artillery generally moves by truck, as do all special troops.

The fire-power of a modern Infantry Division is tremendous. With thousands of small arms, hundreds of machine guns and mortars, plus the several light and medium field pieces, an Infantry Division can concentrate thousands of pounds of ammunition on a specific area in the shortest possible time.

Though battle tactics differ in various circumstances, an Infantry Division is generally given a specific objective to take or a definite area to hold. Its battle-front varies in size, from a few hundred yards to several miles, depending entirely on its specific mission at a particular time.

In a military campaign in total war, an Infantry Division gives and receives the active cooperation of all branches of the Army, plus definite assistance from the Navy.

Prime examples of this cooperation between all arms of the services were the invasion of North Africa, the campaign in Sicily and the current campaign in Italy. In all three phases in this war, Infantry Divisions spearheaded the attacks with the support of other branches. The usual tactics were first to have the Air Corps plaster the immediate objective with thousands of tons of bombs; next, to have the Navy's heavy guns bombard it, and while this was in progress foot soldiers moved in and took over.

Quite properly, the Infantry has been called the "Queen of Battle." Since ancient times, the Infantry has carried the brunt of battles. Throughout recorded history, it has always been foot troops who captured and held ground. And, more than ever, it has been proven in this war that the Infantry is the one indispensable branch of the Army.

It is not easy to be a good Infantryman. The training is the most rigorous, the life is often monotonous, and seldom is there any glamour or glory attached to the foot soldier. But there is a lot of inner-satisfaction in knowing that you are doing a tough job to the best of your ability. When you're in an Infantry Division, you can take a fierce and sincere pride in the knowledge that you have gone up against tough men and pitted your strength, mental and physical, against them, and that you were not found wanting.

As Lieutenant General Lesley J. McNair, commander of the Army Ground Forces, recently put it: "To the Infantry belong the strong."

MARK Mc CLURE

COLONEL

U. S. A.

CHIEF OF STAFF, 100th INFANTRY DIVISION

Colonel Mark McClure was born in Anderson, Indiana, on February 6, 1898, and attended DePauw University before he was appointed to the United States Military Academy in 1918. Upon his graduation from West Point in 1922, he was commissioned a Second Lieutenant of Field Artillery and assigned to the 2nd Field Artillery Brigade at Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

He was later transferred to Fort Sill, Oklahoma, and in 1926 was promoted to First Lieutenant. An assignment at Fort Meyers, Virginia, preceded his appointment to the faculty of the United States Military Academy. In 1935 he was promoted to Captain and transferred to Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, where he remained until 1938, when he returned to attend the Command and General Staff School.

He was then assigned to the Office of the Chief of Field Artillery and in July, 1940, he was promoted to Major. Remaining in Washington, D. C., he was promoted in December, 1941, to Lieutenant Colonel. When this office was absorbed by the Headquarters of Army Ground forces in May, 1942, he was selected to attend another course at the Command and General Staff School. He was later assigned to the 95th Division as G-3, where he remained until August 22, 1942, when he was promoted to Colonel and transferred to the 10th Division as Chief of Staff.

PERSONNEL

The function of the Assistant Chief of Staff, G-1, concerns the personnel of the Division. Both in combat and in garrison his responsibility is the soldier as a person. He supervises all functions of the Adjutant General, replacement of personnel, awarding of decorations and citations, in addition to other rewards and punishments. He is responsible for leaves of absence and furloughs, religious, recreational and welfare work, the Army postal service and strength, casualty, prisoner of war and other reports. He advises the commander on the morale of the personnel and is charged with the collection and disposition of stragglers and prisoners of war. He is responsible for the internal arrangement of headquarters, sanitation, maintenance of law and order. He supervises relations with civil governments and civilians in a theatre of operation, including initial establishment and operation of military government or martial law. He supervises matters concerning personnel who are prisoners in enemy hands. And he is responsible for graves registration service and burials.

CLIFTON H. FORBUSH
Lieutenant Colonel
G-1

G-2

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE

The primary function of the Assistant Chief of Staff, G-2, is to keep the commander informed regarding the enemy's situation and capabilities. His work concerns intelligence and counterintelligence, and with the assistance of liaison officers of units under his control he is able to collect, compile and evaluate all information of the enemy's capabilities. He supervises the collection of information by radio position-finding and intercept methods. He is responsible for the reproduction and distribution of all maps and coordinates requests for aerial photographs. He supervises the activities of all newspaper correspondents, photographers and broadcasters accompanying the troops. He is responsible for all censorship, both of postal matters and the work of news correspondents, and supervises the preparation and use of codes and ciphers. He makes plans for the reception of visitors at headquarters and the escorting of the same. And he is charged with the dissemination of false information to the enemy, obstruction of enemy propaganda, and takes measures to refute enemy propaganda among the troops or the civil population of the theatre of operations.

PAUL S. REINECKE
Lieutenant Colonel
G-2

G-3

OPERATIONS AND TRAINING

The Assistant Chief of Staff, G-3, is responsible for organization, training and combat operations. He coordinates and prepares plans for the organization and equipment of units and individuals, organization and equipment of schools of instruction, selection of training sites and firing and bombing ranges, the publication of training directives, programs and orders. In combat, he is charged with supervision of all operations, including tactical and strategical studies and estimates. He must study the tactical situation continuously, including location, morale and capabilities of the troops, needs for replacements, terrain and weather conditions and the status of equipment and supplies. He prepares recommendations and reports based on the tactical situation. He is responsible for reconnaissance and security measures, troop movements, tactical employment of units, defense of communication lines and tactical measures to preserve secrecy and effect surprise.

KENNETH E. ECKLAND

Lieutenant Colonel

G-4

SUPPLY AND EVACUATION

The Assistant Chief of Staff, G-4, is charged with the preparation of policies for and the supervision of execution of arrangements for supply, evacuation, transportation and other relative matters. He is responsible for advising the commander relative to the extent of the administrative support that can be given to any proposed strategical or tactical line of action and for recommendations as to the necessary decisions concerning supply and evacuation. He is also responsible for the procurement, storage and distribution of all supplies, the location of supply, evacuation and maintenance establishments, transportation of supplies by land, air and water, construction and maintenance of roads and trails, docks and air-dromes, maintenance of equipment, recommendations for allocation of small arms, ammunition and anti-tank mines, traffic control, construction, operation and maintenance of utilities and other facilities relating to supply, shelter, transportation and hospitalization, but exclusive of fortifications; evacuation and hospitalization of men and animals, salvage, collection and disposal of captured supplies; funds, and priority of expenditure.

Lt. Col. John Claiborn Byrd was born in Durham, North Carolina, on June 26, 1908, and began his military career in 1929 as a member of the 30th Division, a National Guard unit.

He was called to active duty as a Second Lieutenant in September, 1940, when his unit was federalized. Promoted to First Lieutenant in January, 1941, and between April and September of that year he was attached to 30th Division G-2 Section as an Aviation Combat Observer. In September, 1941, he assumed command of the Anti-tank Company of the 120th Infantry Regiment. In February, 1942, he was promoted to Captain.

In August, 1942, he was assigned to the 100th Division as commanding officer of the Antitank Company, 398th Infantry, and held that post until February, 1943, when he became Headquarters Commandant. He was promoted to Major on April 5, 1943, and in June attended the Command and General Staff School. In August, 1943, he was promoted to Commander, 100th Division Special Troops, and on March 21, 1944, was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel.

An Army travels on its stomach!

Services of supply . . . logistics . . . getting the materials, the men, the food all together at the right spot, at the right time. . . . To the Quartermaster falls the duty of providing the basic requirements of man—food and clothing. . . . From the day the soldier first enters the service until the day he is mustered out, the "QM" watches over him, sees that he eats well, is clothed well, equipped well.

No ration points—
but lots of paper work!

Ordnance

Mechanics of the battlefield, they keep the trucks rolling and the guns firing. . . . Overhauling motors, repairing weapons, their work is never done.

Crew tunes up motor of big GI truck (above).

When the weapons refuse to fire, this man finds the reason why (above).

Not the Village Blacksmith—but an important cog in the smooth-functioning repair chain (right).

The job is done! The work is checked! Tomorrow the gun will be back in action (below).

JOHN A. ALLG AIR
MAJOR

COMMANDING, 325th ENGINEER COMBAT BATTALION

Major John Andrew Allgair was born in Somerville, New Jersey, on August 29, 1914, and was graduated from Rutgers University in 1936 with a Master's Degree in Civil Engineering. After serving with the 28th Infantry for a year at Fort Niagara, he assumed an engineering assignment with the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey and spent a month in Venezuela, South America.

On September 20, 1937, he was commissioned Second Lieutenant and assigned to the 11th Engineers at Fort Clayton, Canal Zone. In July, 1940, he was transferred to the 1st Engineers at Fort Dupont, and in September, 1940, was promoted to First Lieutenant. An assignment to the Engineer Replacement Center at Fort Belvoir followed, and in August, 1941, he was sent to the 85th Heavy Pontoon Battalion. In September, 1941, he was promoted to Captain.

In April, 1942, he was transferred to the Engineer Unit Training Center at Camp Claiborne, La., and on September 26, 1942, he was promoted to Major. On February 20, 1944, he was assigned to the 100th Division, where he assumed command of the 325th Engineer Combat Battalion.

325TH MEDICAL BATTALION

DON S. WENGER
LIEUTENANT COLONEL

COMMANDING, 325th MEDICAL BATTALION

Lieutenant Colonel Don S. Wenger was born in Monroe, Wisconsin, on December 18, 1911, and received his medical education at Milton College, Marquette University and the University of Wisconsin, being graduated from the latter in 1936.

He practiced surgery in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and was associated with the Milwaukee Hospital. On February 14, 1940, he received a commission of First Lieutenant in the Medical Corps and was assigned to the Brooklyn Port of Embarkation as Assistant Port Surgeon. He was promoted to Captain in October, 1941, and later joined the crew of the USAT Leonard Wood, which saw action in the Pacific theatre at the start of World War II.

He then was placed on the staff of the Walter Reed General Hospital, and in April, 1942, was promoted to Major. In March, 1942, he moved to the 77th Division as regimental surgeon, and in November was transferred to the 100th Division. Serving as battalion executive officer and then as division artillery surgeon, he took command of the 325th Medical Battalion in May, 1943. He was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel in October, 1943.

The Infantry, the Infantry,
With the dirt behind their ears;
They can whip their weight in wildcats,
And drink their weight in beers;
The Cavalry, the Artillery and all the Engineers—
They couldn't lick the Infantry in a hundred million years!

COMMANDING, 397th INFANTRY REGIMENT

Colonel William Alexander Ellis was born in Fairmont, Minnesota, on October 30, 1893. He is a graduate of Fairmont High School and has a degree from the Minnesota School of Business. Commissioned a Second Lieutenant in the Infantry in 1917, he served 18 months in France during World War I, first with the 34th Division and later with the 4th Division. For several months after the Armistice he was on duty with the U. S. Army of Occupation in Germany.

Promoted to Captain in 1920, he had a four-year tour of duty at various stations in this country, and in 1925 he was ordered to Hawaii, where he served until 1929 as Assistant G-4. Returning home, he again served in this country, being promoted to Major in 1935.

He has completed courses for Infantry Officers at Fort Benning, Georgia, and served as Senior Infantry Instructor and Professor of Military Science at Virginia Military Institute between 1938 and 1940. He rose to Lieutenant Colonel in 1940 and Colonel in 1942. He has held his present command since activation of the 100th Division.

COLONEL

COMMANDING, 398th INFANTRY REGIMENT

Colonel Robinson Earl Duff was born in El Paso, Illinois, on January 18, 1895, and attended Purdue University until 1917, when he was commissioned a Second Lieutenant of Infantry. His first assignment was with the 46th Infantry of the 9th Division, serving there until its inactivation in 1921. During this time he was promoted to First Lieutenant in February, 1918, and to Captain in September, 1918.

He was then assigned to the University of Oklahoma as Assistant Professor of Military Science and Tactics. In 1923 he was sent to Hawaii with the 35th Division. Later he was assigned to the Infantry School, and in 1931 he was selected to attend a two-year course at the Command and General Staff School. After a tour of duty with the Arizona National Guard, he attended the Army War College in 1935. Upon graduation he was promoted to Major and sent to the 13th Infantry.

In July, 1938, he was assigned to the G-4 Division of the War Department General Staff, and was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel in September, 1940, and to Colonel in December, 1941. He was later detailed as Chief of the General Depot Service in the Army Supply Forces, and in July, 1942, became Chief of Storage and Shipping. On September, 1942, he was ordered to the 100th Division as commanding officer of the 398th Infantry.
